

ZOMBIE APOCALYPSE PARTY GAMES

Below you will find some undeniably fun Zombie Party game ideas.

Zombie Head Shot

For this game use our specially created Zombie Apocalypse Shoot Gallery. Using the printed Zombie Targets or the Zombie Cans have the children takes turns trying to kill the zombies by shooting them in the head. The player with the most successful head shots (or knocked out Zombie cans) wins.

Legless Race

A good Zombie game will get the kids outside and exercising without even realizing it. Of course this game can be completed inside as well. You will need to have a starting point and an ending point. Place a fake brain , body part, or other Zombie treat at the finish line as an award for your hardworking zombies. Have all the children lie on their stomachs at the starting point. Tell the children they are zombies with no legs and their meal is at the finish line. They cannot stand up or crawl to get to the end. The first to arrive gets to "feast."

Red Light, Dead Night

Start out by having one child be the only survivor, the rest are the zombies. Have the survivor stand away from the zombies with their back to the undead. The zombies will line up. The survivor will yell dead night and the zombies will rush towards them. When they yell red light all the zombies have to stop. The last to stop is out. This will go on until a zombie gets the survivor or all the zombies are out.

Walk the Dead

It may be the Zombie Apocalypse but this game gives the children a chance to tickle their funny bones. Pick a child to be the zombie and have them lie flat on their back on the floor. All the other children are to try in any way they can without touching the zombie to get them to wake from the dead. Tell the kids to make funny noises, tell jokes, and act silly. If the zombie giggles, moves or talks they are out and someone else becomes the zombie.

Hollywood Undead

Now that we are in a Zombie Apocalypse that means even famous people are zombies. Write down several popular movie or TV characters names on pieces of paper and put them in a container. One by one have the children pull a name and read it to themselves. They have to do the character as a zombie while others try and guess who it is they are imitating. The one with the most correct guesses wins.

Zombie Who, Zombie You!

Name one child as the zombie, blindfold them and have all the other children gather around them in a circle. On go, the zombie will try to find one of the children and when they are tagged they have to laugh. If the zombie can guess who the laugh belongs to they become human and the one that laughed becomes the zombie. With continued play this will give each child a chance to be the zombie.

Brain Dead

Have the kids split into teams of humans versus zombies. You will need a ball and if you feel like being festive you can use a pink ball and draw lines so that it looks like a brain. Have the teams stand opposite each other with some distance. You can toss the ball in the air and have the teams scramble for it. The children will try to tag the other team with the ball. If you are tagged then you are out. If someone catches the ball they can pick one of their team mates to bring back into the game. The team with the last standing players wins.

Musical Zombie

This is musical chairs but without the chairs and with lots of zombies. Have some good zombie music ready. For example Thriller by Michael Jackson is a good upbeat song kids enjoy. Have the children gather around and tell them they are all zombies. When the music starts they can dance and act crazy but when it stops they must return to being zombies. The last to stop dancing each time loses and the last one standing wins.
